The form and format of the contract may vary. It can be either a sales contract, or it can be an act of sale. Because of the similarities in the names, you can assume that they mean one and the same thing. However, this would be a serious mistake, since the act of sale is completely different from the contract of sale. Now, how crucial is due diligence when it comes to real estate documents, it becomes quite obvious if we go through the incidents listed below. Example this. On October 31, 2020, the 40-year-old was arrested by Noida police on suspicion of decepting the bank r 2 crores, forging documents of sales acts and using credit. On the same day, Chief Judge Madurai G Ilangovan granted bail before awaiting two sub-registrars who were arrested by dindigul district criminal division on suspicion of registering documents without prior verification. According to the police, they both registered the sales file without verifying the certificate of charge, as well as the original documents, parents' documents, death certificate, etc. In this context, we will discuss the key differences between the two documents. Sale agreement is a promise of a future transfer of property ownershipSale deed includes information about both parties (buyer & seller), their age, addresses and other detailsSed of the terms terms which the property will be transferredSale deed includes information about both the parties (buyer & seller), their age, addresses and other detailsSed of the terms terms terms which the property will be transferredSale deed includes information about both the parties (buyer & seller), their age, addresses and other detailsSed of the terms terms which the property will be transferredSale deed includes information about both the parties ( buyer & seller), their age, addresses and other detailsSeded of the terms terms which the property will be transferredSale deed includes information about both the parties (buyer & seller), their age, addresses and other detailsSeded of the terms terms which the property willd willd and shares in the property to the new owner. The contract of sale gives the buyer the right to acquire the property under certain conditions. The buyer must pay stamp duty and registration fee in order to perform the contract of saleSales deed of sale, signed and made by the seller and the buyer on an unjudicial stamp paper. What is a sales agreement? A sale agreement is a contract for the sale of real estate in the future. This agreement sets out the conditions under which the property will be transferred. The Law on the transfer of ownership of property of 1882, which regulates matters relating to the sale and transfer of immovable property, defines the contract of sale or the contract of sale as the following: Contract for the sale of immovable property, is the contract under which the sale of such property takes place under conditions settled between the parties – § 54. Section 54 also provides that it does not in itself give rise to any interest or charging of such immovable property. It is clear from the above definition that the contract of sale contains a promise to transfer the property in question in the future, in accordance with certain conditions. Thus, that contract itself does not create any rights or shares in the property for the proposed purchaser. What constitutes a sales contract is the right of the buyer to purchase the property under certain conditions. Similarly, the seller also receives the right to receive remuneration from the buyer for compliance with part of its terms and conditions. In the event of non-sale or transfer by the seller of the property to the buyer, the buyer receives the right to a certain performance, in accordance with the provisions of the Act on special exemptions from aid, 1963. A similar right is granted to the seller under the contract, in order to obtain a certain benefit from the buyer. Although signing a sales agreement does not mean a sale, it is a key step in this direction. Therefore, buyers must be very aware of the terms and conditions referred to in the contract. The meaning of the sales agreementSealing agreement becomes important in the light of several factors. First, it is legal evidence that the buyer and seller have concluded a contract under which a decision on the future course of action will be taken in the event of a dispute. In addition, if you apply for a home loan, the bank will not accept your application until you sign a sales agreement. What is a sales act? The sales act is a legal document that proves that the seller has transferred absolute ownership of the property to the buyer. Through this document, the new owner acquires rights and shares in the property. The deed of sale usually consists of the following information-Details of buyers and sellers (name, age and addresses)Description of the property (total area, construction details, exact address and surroundings)Sales amount paid advance payment, as well as the method of paymentTime frame, when the title is actually transferred to the buyer. Actual date of delivery of possession. Compensation clause (Seller promises to pay the buyer for any damages in case of property disputes, resulting in monetary losses to the buyer)Supreme Court ruling on the sale deed and the contract of saleThe conclusion of the sale may or may not lead to the actual sale of the property in question. Some of the stamp duty laws, such as the Maharashtra Baking Act, recognise the contract for the sale of immovable property on the same basis as the relevant transport act and are therefore subject to the same stamp duty as applicable to the relevant act of transfer or sale of immovable property. Because of such provisions, which require the payment of stamp duty on the sales contract, people mistakenly perceive the sales contract as an appropriate act of sale. The Supreme Court of India in 2012, in Suraj Lamp & Industries (P) Ltd (2) v. The State of Haryana, dealing with the validity of the sale of real estate made through a power of attorney, ruled as follows: The property can be transferred / transferred only by the act of transport (deed of sale), duly stamped and registered in accordance with the requirements of the law. Therefore, we repeat that the property can be legally and lawfully transferred/transferred only by a registered act of transport.. Any sales contract (sales contract) which is not a registered act of ownership (act of sale) would not meet the requirements of Sections 54 and 55 of the Law on transfer of ownership and does not confer any title or transfer any shares in the property (with the exception of the limited right granted under Section 53A of the Law on transfer of ownership). Under the Law on transfer of ownership, a contract of sale, whether in possession or without possession, is not a transfer. Article 54 of the Law on transfer of ownership provides that the sale of immovable property may be made only by means of a registered instrument and a contract of sale does not create any interest or fees on its subject matter. The Supreme Court also reiterated the importance of the contract of sale between the builder and the buyer, since it recently ruled that the period of allocation of the apartment to the buyer of the house should be considered from the date of conclusion of the buyer-builder contract, and not from the date of registration of the project under the Real Estate Act (Regulation and Development), 2016. The General Court also ordered the RERA authorities to pay compensation from the builder in accordance with the contract of sale, the sanctity of which has been maintained by this provision. As a result of the non-implementation of the act of sale in accordance with the Indian Registration Act of 1908, registration of any contract for the transfer of any share in the property with a value of more than one hundred rupees is required. Thus, if you have bought any property under contracts for sale, sale, after it the proper act of sale, you do not receive any rights or shares in the property allegedly transferred under the contract of sale. This absolute rule is subject to the exceptional provisions of Section 53A of the Law on transfer of ownership. Section 53A provides that where the purchaser has acquired ownership of the immovable property which is the subject of the transfer, while fully respecting part of the contractual obligation, the seller is not entitled to interfere with the possession thus granted to the buyer. It should be noted that Section 53A provides a shield for the proposed transferee before the transferor and excludes the vendor from interfering with the possession of the transferor, but does not treat the title of buyer to the property. Ownership of the property still remains with the seller. Thus, in cases where you bought any property under a sales contract and came into possession, the title of the property still remains with the developer, unless the act of sale was subsequently executed and registered in accordance with the Indian Registration Act. It therefore becomes clear that ownership of the property can only be transferred to the sale file. In the absence of a duly stamped and registered act of sale, no right, title or share in the property shall be vested in the purchaser of the immovable property. FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS A sales agreement is a contract for the sale of a property in the future. This agreement sets out the conditions under which the property will be transferred. The act of sale is the main legal document by which the seller transfers his ownership to the buyer, who then acquires absolute ownership of the property. The sale agreement is a promise in the future that the property will be transferred to the rightful owner, while the act of sale is a real transfer of ownership of the property to the buyer.
